NEW MEXICO. By F. A. Jones, E. M. , C. E. , LL. D. Field Assistant of United States Geological Survey, Albuquerque, X. Mex. The work in collecting the production of the precious metals of New Mexico for the year 1902 has been carried out by personal inquiry and visit into every mining camp and district in the Territory. In many respects the results for the year in question are disappointing, but from a standpoint of scientific and intelligent mining and metallurgy which is now receiving the attention of operators generally throughout the more prominent camps, the outlook for the future is, indeed, very promising. While the production of gold and silver will always contribute materially to the wealth of New Mexico, the real greatness of its mineral values lie in its extensive coal and iron deposits. New Mexico is the cradle of the earliest operations of mining in the United States. It was here in 1541 that Coronado pushed his intrepid band of explorers across the burning wastes of sand to the traditional city of the Gran Quivira in search of the seven fabled cities of Cibola. He led this expedition as far north as Santa Fe, and his coterie of adventurers are said to have filled their packs with gold dust, nuggets, and turquoise, taken from the terror-stricken inhabitants of these ancient pueblos. From that time on New Mexico has contributed to the wealth of the...
