Wasps in a Golden Dream Hum a Strange Music (Paperback)

By Asher Ghaffar

ECW Press, Canada, Canada, 2008. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book. In the age of increasing surveillance of borders, the border is where every thing significant occurs; map the border and you begin to understand the pulse of a nation, Asher Ghaffar writes in the introduction to wasps in a golden dream hum a strange music, his debut collection of poetry. In 2003, he was stopped at the Waghah border post, where hundreds gather to watch the spectacle of the aggressive flag-lowering ceremony on both the Indian and Pakistani side. Deploying the Waghah border literally and metaphorically, Ghaffar movingly describes the affective dimensions of race from the position of second-generation Canadian-born Muslim immigrant, deftly interrogating media depictions of the War on Terrorism. As Ghaffar writes: I saw an ocean between two worlds / where flowers burst like paper rage. He also documents, in a series of cascading questions, the multiple ways that he came to understand the aftermath of the July 7th suicide bombings. At times the poetry is productively conflicted between narrative and verse, and the text opens up a fertile space where multiple genres flourish and jest. In the spirit of anti colonial poets like Aime...
